Message to the Working Group on Oral Contraceptives Over-the-Counter

Dear members of the OCs OTC Working Group,

We wanted to give you a quick update on some issues relevant to the group:

Panel at the annual meeting of the American Public Health Association
At the APHA meeting in San Diego in October, there will be a panel presentation entitled “Moving Oral Contraceptives over the Counter.” If the links to the individual abstracts don’t work below, you can access the session at http://apha.confex.com/apha/136am/webprogram/Session23358.html. We hope to see some of you there!

Letter to the editor of Lancet about OTC access for OCs
In the last update we sent around, we mentioned the Lancet editorial that accompanied a meta-analysis of studies demonstrating the protective effect of COC use against ovarian cancer—and advocated for OTC access. A letter to the editor was published in May, which is attached, that argues that women may not be well served by OTC provision because women will not be given the option of receiving a long-acting reversible contraceptive (like the IUD or implant). It also brings up issues related to counseling and safety. The LARC argument is interesting—although it sounds a lot like holding women hostage to get their Pap smears. We’d be curious to know what you think.

Internet provision of OCs in the UK
You may have heard about the launch of a website in the UK where current OC users there can purchase three packs of pills online. Here’s a link to the website:

Accuracy of women’s self-screening for contraindications to oral contraceptive use
An article based on the study that Ibis and the University of Texas performed in El Paso examining women’s ability to self-screen for contraindications to OCs will be coming out in Obstetrics and Gynecology next month. We’ll circulate a copy when it’s in press.

Future working group meeting
We’re hoping to plan a meeting of the working group later this year and will keep you informed about possible dates!

Please let me know if you have any questions or comments about the material presented here. And also let me know if you’d like to be removed from the list.

Thanks,
Dan
